Re: Your letter dated February 28, 2005

Dear Ms. Vorberg,

Your February 28, 2005 letter has been received.

As you know very well, there are two obvious false statements in the letter:

1. "Prior to suit, and while in court, we requested that you provide us with the keys to the vehicle at issue"
2. "As you know, the car has been stored at the D'Andrea Buick since the date you towed the car to the facility"

As you are aware perfectly, the truth is:

1. Your firm and I had no contact whatsoever prior to suit. I did not even know the existence of your firm. No one from your firm has ever mentioned the car keys in the court. Further, after I sent a fax and letter to your client on September 9, 2003, for more than seventeen months, your client fails to response to my request, no one has ever contacted me directly from your client by fax, telephone or mail, asking for keys and discussing how to solve the problem in anyway. Otherwise, the instant lawsuit might not be absolutely necessary.
2. It is your client towed back the car in question while I expected to get my money back.

Being polite and patient, I still have to say: It is unacceptable to provide misrepresentation from a law firm again and again. This is the third time I raise the same issue.

Please make appropriate corrections to your letter first; any sincere request, question, discussion or argument will be welcome.

All private communication between us shall be in writing, it can be kept confidential after you make specific requirement.

Sincerely,

Yuling Zhan
